TABLE OF CONTENTS

Note on the Text ................................................................. ix
Preface by Rocco Buttiglione .................................................. xi
Acknowledgments .................................................................. xiv
Introductory Essay ................................................................ xv

Reflections on the Theory and Practice of Education

against the Principles of Rousseau’s Emile

Preface ................................................................................. 1

Part One.

Reflections on the Basic Principles of the Theory of Education

1. Rousseau’s seductive rhetoric ........................................ 4
2. Emile is an unreal abstraction ......................................... 5
3. Whether contrariety is part of man’s original nature ........ 7
4. Whether the self is ordered to other selves from the beginning ............................................................. 11
5. Whether self-interest is a sufficient foundation for moral social relationships ........................................ 17
6. Love of honor and the attraction to an idea of perfection are natural inclinations ................................. 18
7. The attraction to moral virtue is a natural inclination .... 21
8. Whether society corrupts man’s natural goodness ......... 24
9. Whether society invents the fear of death and makes men cowards .......................................................... 27
10. Whether laws and society reduce man to a servile state of dependency ......................................................... 30
THE ANTI-EMILE

11. On the natural love of order and origins of society 34
12. Man's reason, the natural analogue to animal instinct, requires education 38
13. Whether children are capable of understanding moral categories 43
14. On the importance of the fear of God in the moral education of children 48
15. On the authority of fathers and the obedience of children 51

Part Two.
Reflections on Particular Educational Practices, and Most Especially on Matters of Curriculum

16. On reasoning with children 58
17. Rousseau's dialogue misrepresents how to reason morally with a child 62
18. On a child's capacity for handling ideas 67
19. On teaching fables 71
20. On the study of languages, and especially Latin 85
21. On the study of history 96
22. On the study of geography 104
23. On the study of geometry 107
24. Francis Bacon's observations on studying and reading 110
25. The intellectual temperament of Rousseau's student 119
26. On the native climate of the ideal student 122
27. On the ideal student's physical constitution 126
28. On the social status of Rousseau's student 129
29. Insufficiency of philosophy for forming a national ethos 133

Conclusion 139
Endnotes 143
Index 165

viii